Wound Management

Wound management and the role honey can play will be covered by Dr. Hayes during this discussion.

Speakers

Dr. Angela Gifford

Originally from Ithaca, New York, Dr. Angela Gifford found veterinary medicine to be the perfect combination of her interests in dog training and biology. After completing her undergraduate degree in biology at St. Bonaventure University, Dr. Gifford continued on to Cornell University College of Veterinary Medicine where she completed her veterinary degree in 2009. During veterinary school she participated in research on reproductive disease of the dog and the congenital disorder, petrus excavatum. She was awarded the American Animal Hospital Association Student Achievement Award in Medicine and Surgery, the Neuroanatomy and Clinical Neurology Award, the Westminster Kennel Club Foundation Veterinary Scholarship, and the Fingerlakes Kennel Club Veterinary Scholarship.

Dr. Gifford continued on to a rotating internship in small animal medicine and surgery at Oradell Animal Hospital in New Jersey, and then moved to Rhode Island to complete a three year residency in surgery at Ocean State Veterinary Specialists. During residency, her research focused on surgical oncology and the use of chemotherapy beads in the treatment of various soft tissue tumors dogs, cats, and rabbit.

Dr. Galina Hayes

Dr Galina Hayes BVSc, PhD, DACVECC, is an associate surgeon at Valley Central Veterinary Referral Center. She is also board certified in Small Animal Emergency and Critical Care. Dr Hayes has been a practicing veterinarian since 1998, working first in mixed practice and then in small animal general practice. She graduated from Bristol University in the UK. During her first year in practice in rural Wales, she fell in love with surgery and emergency medicine, returning to veterinary school in Canada to complete an internship, then a residency in small animal emergency and critical care medicine, and then a residency in small animal surgery. Along the way she completed a PhD in epidemiology, and specialized in mathematical modeling of disease patterns. She has been involved in many research projects, and has published extensively, both in journals and textbooks. She won the small animal resident's abstract award two years in a row at the conference of the International Veterinary Emergency and Critical Care Society.

Dr Hayes' surgical interests include reconstructive techniques and emergency surgical procedures, however she is interested in all surgery and how it may specifically benefit the patients under her care. She is a strong proponent of evidence-based medicine. Dr Hayes live with her fiancé, Scott, and their dog, Bean. Their interests include fly fishing and mountain biking.
